Last year, the White House Initiative on Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders (WHIAAPI) partnered with other White House Initiatives to engage youth about health care changes that are happening through the Affordable Care Act (ACA). This partnership led to the recruitment of young leaders to become E3! Ambassadors to lead ACA outreach activities in their communities.

Engage, Educate, Empower (E3!) is the expansion of the program to include these four topic areas: Education, Mental Health, Pathways to Public Service, and Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA). We are inviting young leaders like you to become E3! Ambassadors and lead outreach activities in those four areas in your local communities this year. The possibilities are endless – set up a table to share resources at a campus fair, create outreach videos, or even host a conference – whatever you want to do to get the word out to those around you!

To help you get started, we have created a toolkit that caters to each specific area! These toolkits are to help you get started – do not feel limited to the ideas and resources we have compiled for you! Let this be a starting point for you and let your creativity take off from here. This toolkit is focused on Pathways to Public Service.

PATHWAYS TO PUBLIC SERVICE: The Issue

Infographic based on data released by the Office of Public Management. (Created by the White House Initiative on AAPIs)

According to the U.S. Census¹, the AAPI community is the fastest-growing racial group in the country. From 2000 to 2010, the AAPI community has grown by 46%, and by 2020, almost one out of every five (19.5%) Americans will be of AAPI descent. While the ethnic makeup of our nation is diversifying, AAPI leadership and representation in the federal government is lacking. Currently, only 5.4% of the federal workforce² is of AAPI descent and AAPIs represent a mere 4.4% of the Senior Executive Service (SES). Where this may seem on par with the overall population, it does not represent the underrepresentation of Native Hawaiians, Pacific Islanders, and Southeast Asians in the federal government. In order to increase the AAPI voice in all levels of the federal government, it is critical to raise awareness around federal job and internship opportunities, and provide career development for AAPI youth.

Outreach Ideas

Use the suggested outreach ideas below to get an idea of what activities you should host during these months.

- Reach out to several student organizations and ask them to join your organization to promote opportunities within the federal government for the AAPI community.
- Lead events and workshops focusing on professional development (consider inviting alumni and faculty to share their advice).
- Include resources and information on working in the federal government on student organization websites.
- Use social media! Check out @WhiteHouseAAPI on Twitter and Facebook for examples.

- Host a workshop to help students develop skills that will make them stronger candidates for federal internships and careers.
- Have students share their experiences with interning in federal offices in Washington, DC and why their internship was a valuable learning opportunity.
- Host a career/internship fair that will promote the different opportunities to students.
- Get creative... the possibilities are endless!
